Is informed consent possible in the context of the COVID-19 injectable products?

jessicarose1974
1.32K followers
Follow
95 0 Comments Share

1 year ago 4.88K

This is a short clip is from the original interview with 5,669 views currently, published on Apr 9, 2021. In this interview, we discuss the current situation in Israel's Covid response, with two highly qualified and experienced w Show more

10 Comments

Sort by likes

Add a comment...

0/2000 Comment

RHMck49 1 year ago

The Nuremburg Declaration should be incorporated into every Constitution, as well as the rule "First Do No Harm"
It's painfully obvious that every major institution has been infiltrated, and is now controlled, by radical Marxists seeking the destruction of Western Civilization.
Time for a Great Awakening, not a great reset.

16 likes Reply

ShawnSiegel 1 year ago

Informed consent is impossible not only in the context of Covid injectables, but all vaccines, though the gene therapy jabs falsely labeled vaccines are starkly leagues worse. More to the point, no MD, RN or CVS pharmacist can carry out a vaccination without breaking the fundamental medical ethic of first do no harm. The traditional, cyclical outbreaks of temporary, acute infectious illnesses have been replaced with an epidemic of chronic autoimmune and neurological disorders, thanks to vaccination.

Only once in my now thirteen years of vaccine research have I been told of a phone call to a pediatrician's office to find out whether the practice would accept non-vaccinating families, and the response was, Oh, we don't vaccinate anyone. It would be unethical.

10 likes Reply

› Show 1 reply

winstonSmithNov5 1 year ago

Further still, a poorly run experiment as all the control groups in the phase 3 trials have been eliminated (ie jabbed)...

6 likes Reply

Jersey_Prophet 1 year ago

Let's cut to the chase: the very notion of "informed consent" requires the implied trust of experts. When you board a train or a plane, you have the implicit trust that the person driving/piloting that vehicle is a professional who is trained to bring you from point A to point B safely. You don't need to know how the machine works, or even who trained professional. You simply trust that he is there because he knows his business. Your informed consent is based on the notion that this someone in whom you vested your trust will deliver the service or product as promised.

By walking into a doctors office, we give informed consent to whatever medication or treatment we are prescribed based on trust that it will work for us, or at least not harm us. I think the Hippocratic oath speaks to this sufficiently.

If a doctor tells us it works, we consider ourselves "informed." We don't know a thing about it except what we were informed. If the doctor has lied to us, we were improperly informed, and that informed consent is invalid. We consented to something which was bogus.

Now, it has become imperative that each of us be a trained physician armed with sufficient knowledge to detect whether our doctor is truthful or lying. The person who pokes that needle in our arm, is not even a doctor anymore. It is someone hired to do that and we have handed our body to them in an act of "informed consent" that they are injecting something into our arm which is beneficial, or at least not harmful. Is that real "informed consent." Hell no! That is foolish trust...not "informed consent," and until we abandon the notion that we have given anything close to "informed consent," we are being led down a rabbit hole of evil with no recourse to recover the damage we may sustain.

6 likes Reply

Hsaive 1 year ago

The appropriate informed consent for an untested medication is, "there is a significant chance that you may be severely injured or that you may die as a result of agreeing to take this vaccine."

3 likes Reply

PGU13BHEI 1 year ago

No.

1 like Reply

misterkel1 1 year ago

Fair enough (and in this case obviously murderous fraud), however, this creates a catch-22. How can anyone engage in an experiment? While consent is possible, informed is not at that point.

1 like Reply

mrhills 1 year ago

Do Not Consent;

It is our Inalienable right to defend Our Rights REGARDLESS of what someone who perceives themselves as an authority over you says;

If you do not Love Yourself enough to Defend Yourself, then how will you defend your family, your home, your right to life?; No one has Ultimate Authority over You;

Know your obligations as a Living Man and Woman and defend against evil

1 like Reply